About this Catalogue 200. . . I’m still surprised that I became a bookseller. Yes, I was tiring of the practice of law- - people are not normally ennobled by their suffering, and I was meeting a lot of people in trouble. I enjoyed the clash of legal issues and the research, writing, and argument that accompanied them. But the clash of unhappy people increasingly upset me. “Can’t we all just get along?”

Middle-age dissatisfaction had thus laid the groundwork for me to jump ship- - to some safe harbor. But where? I had never thought about becoming a bookseller. A seemingly random thought became a passion. In the summer of 1987 I took my older son to Peru for his high school graduation present. A bunch of Bill Reese’s catalogues joined us. Thus began my education in the book trade.

In the Fall of 1989 I issued my first catalogue, pretentiously titled, “Sectional Crisis: The Civil War and its Roots.” In 1990 its successor, “Sectional Crisis II,” appeared. In the ensuing 35 years [“Ain’t it funny how time slips away”] I found my safe harbor in the book trade. I am exceedingly grateful to my wife and family for jumping ship with me. And I cannot express in words my gratitude to everyone in our little corner of the world: you have brought me friendships, new ideas, exciting experiences, and fellowship in a worldwide community. Thank you.

It should go without saying that this enjoyable ride is far from over. With the help of the brilliant Susan Monarca, Catalogue 250 beckons.

Acknowledge Liberia’s Independence!

1. [American Colonization Society]: COLONIZATION ROOMS, WASHINGTON CITY, JUNE 14, 1849. DEAR SIR: - YOU ARE AWARE OF THE IMPORTANCE OF HAVING THE INDEPENDENCE OF LIBERIA ACKNOWLEDGED BY THE UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT. YOU PROBABLY DO NOT FULLY APPRECIATE THE DIFFICULTIES WHICH LIE IN THE WAY OF GETTING THIS DONE. SUFFICE IT TO SAY, THAT WE HAVE BUT LITTLE PROSPECT OF SUCCESS, UNTIL SOME ADDITIONAL INFLUENCES ARE BROUGHT TO BEAR UPON THE EXECUTIVE, AND, PERHAPS, THROUGH HIM UPON CONGRESS. WE ARE, THEREFORE, ANXIOUS THAT THERE SHOULD BE AN IMMEDIATE AND POWERFUL MOVEMENT MADE BY THE VARIOUS COLONIZATION SOCIETIES AND OUR FRIENDS GENERALLY, IN DIFFERENT PARTS OF THE COUNTRY. THE EXECUTIVE MUST BE MADE TO FEEL THAT THERE ARE MULTITUDES OF OUR MOST RESPECTABLE AND INFLUENTIAL CITIZENS, WHO THINK THAT OUR GOVERNMENT OUGHT, AT ONCE, TO ACKNOWLEDGE THE INDEPENDENCE OF LIBERIA AND ENTER INTO A COMMERCIAL TREATY WITH HER. . .

Reverend William McLain was the Secretary of the American Colonization Society. Also in ink at the bottom margin: "Wm. Bostwick, Esq. New Haven, Ct," the intended recipient, a cotton merchant who divided his time between New Haven and Augusta, Georgia. Yale has his papers. Although Liberia had declared its independence in 1847, the United States did not recognize it until 1862, in Abraham Lincoln's presidency. $350.00

Preparing for the Canada Expedition Against the British

2. [American Revolution]: KNOW ALL MEN BY THESE PRESENTS, THAT WE, ELIJAH ROBINSON OF STAFFORD & JAMES CHAMBERLAIN OF TOLLAND BOTH IN THE COUNTY OF HARTFORD ARE HOLDEN AND FIRMLY BOUND UNTO THE GOVERNOR AND COMPANY OF THE ENGLISH COLONY OF CONNECTICUT, IN NEW-ENGLAND, IN THE SUM OF THREE THOUSAND POUNDS, LAWFUL MONEY, TO BE PAID TO SAID GOVERNOR AND COMPANY... THIS 24TH DAY OF JUNE A.D. 1776.

THE CONDITION OF THE ABOVE OBLIGATION IS SUCH, THAT WHEREAS THE ABOVE BOUNDEN ELIJAH ROBINSON IS APPOINTED PAY-MASTER TO HIS OWN COMPANY, NOW TO BE RAISED, TO JOIN THE CONTINENTAL ARMY IN CANADA, NOW IF THE SAID ELIJAH ROBINSON SHALL FAITHFULLY AND JUSTLY DISPOSE OF ALL THE MONEYS HE SHALL RECEIVE OUT OF THE PUBLIC TREASURY... THE ABOVE OBLIGATION TO BE VOID, OTHERWISE TO REMAIN IN FULL FORCE AND Effect. [Connecticut]: 1776. Folio printed broadside, completed in manuscript, 8-7/8" x 14-1/4." Docketed on verso in ink script. Signed in ink by Elijah Robinson and James Chamberlain; witnesses’ signatures Thos. Seymour and Henry
Seymour. Their bond secured their proper disposition of funds for raising a Company of the Continental Army to join the Canada Expedition. Old horizontal fold with light browning, untrimmed. Light wear. Very Good.

In 1775, the Continental Army participated in the Invasion of Quebec, an attempt with Benedict Arnold's help to take over Quebec and convince its French Canadians to aid the thirteen colonies in the Revolution. The attempt was unsuccessful, and in December, 1775, the Americans and French were defeated. A remnant of soldiers continued fighting until British reinforcements arrived in May, 1776, and drove them out. In early June the Continental Army re-entered Quebec to drive out the British troops, and they were again forced to retreat.

Capt. Elijah Robinson [1735-1809] served in Gen. Spencer's 2nd Regiment from its formation in the spring of 1775 through its disbandment December 19, 1775, participating in the invasion of Quebec; was with the State Regiment in the Northern Department, connected to Capt. Mott's Battalion; with Col. Ely's State Regiment in June, 1777; and with Col. Enos' Regiment, his company arriving June 29., 1778, and being engaged for three months. He later moved to Vermont and served as a State Representative, Wethersfield Town Selectman, and Judge of Windsor County. [Robinson Genealogical Society: ROBINSON GENEALOGY, DESCENDANTS OF THE REV. JOHN ROBINSON... VOLUME I, p. 82.]

Capt James Chamberlain [1734-1812] was the son of Joseph and Mary [Johnson] Chamberlain, and married to Abigail Boynton. He represented Tolland in the Connecticut General Assembly in 1775, commanded a company of cavalry for two tours during the American Revolutionary War, and was a selectman of Tolland in 1777. [Waldo, L.: THE EARLY HISTORY OF TOLLAND. AN ADDRESS... 1861, pp. 57, 77, 144.]

Col. Thomas Seymour [1735-1829] was a Yale graduate, King's Attorney in 1767, Connecticut's State Attorney after the Revolutionary War, and grandfather of Connecticut Governor Thomas Henry Seymour. Seymour also served as Head of the Committee of Pay Table, represented Hartford at the General Assembly at 18 sessions between 1774 and 1793, served with the Connecticut Senate [House of Assistants] from 1793 to 1803, and was Hartford's first mayor from 1774 to 1812. There were several Henry Seymours from New York and Connecticut during this period.

“Diabolical Traffic”

The newspaper Pilot [6 September 1873] called the Padrona System "the most brutal and inexcusable species of human slavery," "a diabolical traffic," "a shocking institution." Ancarola, a padrone, was responsible for taking little Italian children to America for employment in brutal working conditions.

Elbridge T. Gerry, President of the Society, calls the padroni, in his introduction, "a class of adventurers" who exploit "wretchedly poor" Italian families with false promises of their children's education and advancement. "These helpless little children neither speak nor understand English. Hence they are not only dependent for their subsistence upon these padroni, but are unable to appeal against them even if they dared to do so."

The pamphlet recounts in detail the details of the kidnapping, the arrest and trial of Ancarola, and his conviction.

Akron: The Key to Commerce Across The Alleghenies

5. [Bank of Akron]: TO THE HON. THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF OHIO--
THE UNDERSIGNED HAVING BEEN APPOINTED A COMMITTEE OF THE CITIZENS OF AKRON, AT A MEETING HELD AT THE HOUSE OF GEN. NORTHROP
ON THE 14TH OF DEC. 1835. . . FOR THE PURPOSE OF TAKING INTO CONSIDERATION THE SUBJECT OF THEIR APPLICATION, HERETOFORE MADE,

This rare plea to establish a Bank at Akron is signed in type by James W. Philips, Richard Howe, and seven other Committee members at Akron, 18 December 1835. It emphasizes the accelerating development of commerce across the Alleghenies. Explaining "the facts on which our application for a Bank is based," they note that the Pennsylvania & Ohio Canal will have its terminus at Akron; and provide a detailed mercantile and financial profile of Akron and the neighboring town of Middlebury, two miles distant, listing exports from flour, wheat, oats, cheese and butter, plus other exports by canal. Current "population of the village is between 12 and 1300."

No More “Stragglers & Pillagers”

The Battle of Antietam had occurred two weeks earlier, America's bloodiest day, with more than 20,000 killed, wounded, or missing. It is considered a Union victory: it halted General Lee's foray into Maryland, and provided the occasion for President Lincoln's issuance of the Preliminary Emancipation Proclamation.

This Order was issued "By Command of Maj. Genl. McClellan. [Signed] S. Williams A.A. Genl." Beneath that notation, at the bottom of page 2, are the signatures of AAAG Chas. Sanborn, for the 1st Army Corps, Oct. 2, 1862; and John Williams, AA Genl for the second Division, 1st Corps, Oct. 3, 1862.

"We are now occupying a country inhabited by a loyal population, who look to us for the preservation of order and discipline, instead of suffering our men to go about in small parties, lawlessly depredating upon their property.

"Armed patrols will be sent out daily from all the different Corps in this Army, to arrest all Officers and Soldiers who are absent from the limits of their Camps, without written permission from Corps, Division or Brigade Commanders." Those arrested will be sent "under guard to Harper's Ferry, there to be kept at work on the defences of that place."

   Beneath the signature of S. Williams are the signatures of AADG R. Sanborn, for the 1st Army Corps; and John Williams, AA Genl for the second Division, 1st Corps, Oct. 8, 1861 [i.e., 1862]. $250.00 text]. With an envelope addressed to Mr. Foster Edwards, the author's uncle, and the postal cancel [Manchester, Dec. 10]. Light wear, Very Good. Note that the 19 December date of McCarty's letter is inconsistent with the 10 December postal cancel, a puzzle for which we offer no solution.

Writing from "camp near the Youcapatapa River, Mississippi," Corporal George R. McCarty, Co. E, 78th Ohio Infantry, sent this letter in December 1862. In chatty, colloquial style he describes life in camp. He relays entertaining stories of stealing a keg of whiskey, fellow soldiers fattening up on crackers and "fat meat," how he carries a tent half on his back, and that when connected to another soldier's own half, it makes a shelter "big enough for that old hog of yours to turn around in."

In a more serious vein, he writes about the Battle of Shiloh. "On the 6th of April we marched to Shiloh Battlefield, participating in the fight the next day. We bivouacked near or on the battlefield until the 16th of April when we moved to Shiloh Springs." After a long journey the 78th Ohio arrived at Pittsburg Landing in time to participate in the battle's second day. They camped on the battlefield for the next 10 days; they were detailed to bury the dead, brutal work that made some men sick.

George R. McCarty [1839-?] was a "mast cooper" and "iron moulder." He was first mustered into Co. H, 17th Ohio Infantry as a private in May 1861 for three-month service. He was mustered into Co. E, 78th Ohio Infantry, which was raised in Morgan county, Ohio, in December 1861. He rose through the ranks to Corporal but appears to have deserted or disappeared, as he was not listed on the muster-out roll. Forster Edwards [1793-1871] was a farmer and Protestant Methodist minister in Morgan County, Ohio. $450.00

Kentucky’s Relief Party Has Trouble With the Constitution

The interpretation of this legal issue had profound consequences for Kentucky's citizens. After the Panic of 1819, Kentucky enacted Relief Laws which stayed the payment of debts and required lenders to accept payment in notes of the new, uncapitalized Bank of Kentucky. Lenders who refused would endure lengthy delays before payment, if ever.

Bibb--who had been Kentucky's Chief Justice and would become a U.S. Senator--argues that the Relief Laws do not impair the obligation of contracts, that they are thus constitutional, and that it is the Legislature's duty to define what the obligations of those contracts are. His discussion of the constitutional questions is learned and highly detailed. Kentucky's future Jacksonians, like Amos Kendall and William Barry, stood with the Relief Party, blaming the Bank of the United States for the Panic. For a sketch of Bibb's life, see DAB.

"Come, Ponto, Stand Up Here and Tell the Gentlemen What You Can Do"

A detailed account of a Richmond slave auction, in a full column on page 4. "The sale of negroes at auction is of frequent occurrence in this city. I was present at one the other day; more than a hundred were disposed of that morning. . . A sort of temporary platform was erected in the street for the accommodation of the auctioner and the negro for sale. The purchasers consisted of citizens buying for their own use, and two or three negro speculators from the Western and Southern States, to whom the poor creatures are generally averse to being sold."

The writer offers a "literal narrative," with the actual words of the auctioner, the slaves, and the participants. "The next nigger for sale, gentlemen, is Ponto! Come, Ponto, stand up here and tell the gentlemen what you can do."

“Uncertain and Anxious” Buchanan

15. [Buchanan, James]: SOUTH CAROLINA'S "ULTIMATUM." New York: Currier & Ives, 1861. Lithograph broadside, oblong 13-1/2” x 17-1/4." Couple of small blank upper margin chips, Near Fine.

After South Carolina seceded in December 1860, it sent three commissioners to negotiate with the weak-kneed and still-President Buchanan for possession of the forts in Charleston Harbor. This broadside lampoons Governor Pickens's insistence on the evacuation of Union forces.

"Pickens holds a lit fuse to a giant Union cannon 'Peacemaker,' which is pointed at his own abdomen. He threatens, "Mr. President, if you don't surrender that fort at once, I'll be blewed if I don't fire. Buchanan throws up his hands in alarm and cries, 'Oh, don't! Governor Pickens, don't fire! till I get out of office.'" Weitenkampf emphasizes the "uncertain and anxious look on Buchanan's face."

This broadside is rarely offered for sale.

"A portrayal of the nocturnal raid on the Charleston post office by a mob of citizens and the burning of abolitionist mails found there in July 1835. Mail sacks are handed through a forced window of the ransacked post office, torn open and bundles of newspapers such as 'The Liberator,' the Boston 'Atlas' and 'Commercial Gazette' removed and strewn about. At left, in an open square before a church, a crowd surrounds a bonfire. A sign reading '$20,000 Reward for Tappan' hangs on the wall of the post office, referring to the bounty placed by the city of New Orleans on the head of Arthur Tappan, founder and president of the American Anti-Slavery Society" [web site, Library of Congress].

The picture on the Canal Street Head was in the hands of the Indenture Many years, and was brought there by the purchase. It was a letter of the Author, Mr. William S. Woodruff.

In the early days of the Anti-Slavery agitation, fugitives from the South would sometimes conceal themselves on the Howard question, and so some of the slaves were able to read, the slave holders were pleased that these fugitives might get into their hands, and they might see there an idea of freedom. So it happened that Mary and Mary of Mont Royal, they could go to the office and one of those new and dangerous articles in the mail, and the justice attached to this article would then the method of their work and the notice of 20 thousand dollars reward for the body of Peterman. "Oh call us hard names, call us mere tools / In the hands of the North, to be made such fools, / To watch night and day, with fear and fright, / At a heap of old sand banks mounted with pipe!"

The song mocks McClellan and his troops for succumbing to Confederate trickery: "Those ponderous cannon shining and bright, / Turned out to be pieces of old stove pipe!"

Wikipedia says northerners exasperated with McClellan's performance wrote several bitterly satiric tunes about the incident.

The Confiscation Law in Action

26. [Confiscation Act]: UNION ARMY SEIZES THE REAL ESTATE OF A DISLOYAL VIRGINIAN, AND LEASES IT TO A LOYAL VIRGINIAN. St. Johns Run, Virginia [i.e., West Virginia]: 1862. Single leaf, entirely in ink manuscript on recto and verso. 8" x 12-3/8." A couple of spots. Very Good. Signed by John Campbell, Colonel of the 54th
Regiment of Tennessee Volunteers; John Culp, the lessee of the seized property; and W.H. Rose as witness.

The Confiscation Act of 1861 authorized Union forces to seize the property [including slaves] of disloyal citizens. This document demonstrates Confiscation procedures in action. A very unlucky Josiah Buck went off to war as a Confederate; now deemed a traitor, he lost his property to advancing Union forces. The described events occurred in that portion of Virginia which was destined to become the sovereign State of West Virginia.

"Whereas Josiah Buck, late of Morgan County, Virginia, being in possession of a certain freehold in said county situate about five miles south of the town of Bath on the line of the Morgan and Fredrick Turnpike Road on the banks of Sleepy Creek, and having deserted the same and enlisted as a soldier in the Rebel, or so called "Confederate States" army, now arrayes against the government of the United States in armed violation of the Proclamation of the President of the United States calling upon them to disperse and lay down their arms--thereby committing the heinous crime of treason against the said government of the United States.

"Now the said property having been taken possession of by the United States forces, it otherwise lying idle and going to waste, and John Culp a loyal citizen of the said government being desirous of working and protecting the said farm or freehold, it is thus agreed this twenty-fifth day April in the year of our Lord 1862 by and between Jacob M. Campbell Comd'g 54th Reg. Tenn Vols on behalf of the government of the United States of the first part and John Culp of Morgan County, Va, of the second part as follows.

"The said Culp shall take possession of the said property of the said Josiah Buck as above described and have and use the same upon these conditions. First the said Culp shall repair and make good all the necessary fences on the property and otherwise put it in good farming repair and order. Secondly, he shall deliver to any duly appointed agent of the United States Government the one fourth part of all grain, hay and all other crops raised by said Culp on the farm in the year 1862 and the one half part of all crops of grain hay and all other productions raised by him every other following year so long as he may either by himself or his agent have possession of the said property. Keeping possession of the same and paying to the proper legal representative of the United States Government as above agreed until removed therefrom by some competent legal authority. Witness our names and seals at Sir John's Run the day and year first above written.

Tried and Acquitted for Murdering a Chinese Immigrant

This is the trial of John J. Corcoran, a young white trucker, for the murder of Chinese immigrant laundry worker Lee Teep. It marked the first occasion in New York County that a white American was tried for the murder of a Chinese man.

The Chinese colony in the City raised a subscription for the prosecution of Corcoran and hired private counsel to aid Assistant District Attorney William C. Beecher. The representative of the Chinese government in the United States also took an active interest in the case, particularly because Chinese immigrants had been subjected to protracted harassment. Ex-Judge Horace Russell and Peter Mitchell defended Corcoran.

On April 24, 1881, Lee Teep and two Chinese immigrant coworkers, after attending Sabbath-school at the Twenty-Third Street Presbyterian Church, were confronted by Corcoran and others. Corcoran knocked Teep's hat from his head and, allegedly, stabbed him to death with a pocket knife. The New York Times described Judge Russell's emotional trial presentation, during which he wept and caused even the "hard-hearted court officials" to break down, with some leaving the courtroom in tears. Despite Teep's identification of Corcoran just before his death and corroborating testimony of Teep's companions, the jury acquitted him after a half hour's deliberation. [THE NEW YORK TIMES, July 2, 1881, p.8; July 8, 1881, p. 8.]

30. Currier & Ives: "THE IMPENDING CRISIS" OR CAUGHT IN THE ACT. New York: Entered according to act of Congress in the Year 1860, by Currier & Ives, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of NY, [1860]. Lithograph
New York's favorite son, Senator William Seward, was favored to win the 1860 Republican presidential nomination. No one had labored more faithfully in the anti-slavery cause than he, while managing to retain the ties that bound him to the Nation's governing elite. When he lost the nomination to relatively unknown Abraham Lincoln, Horace Greeley's abandonment of Seward--allegedly because Seward had failed to grant him sufficient patronage--was pinpointed for blame. This scarce lithograph commemorates Greeley's betrayal.

"The print's title derives from the name of Hinton Rowan Helper's 1857 pamphlet 'The Impending Crisis,' an influential document in antislavery literature. Here the crisis is that of New York senator William H. Seward, whose recent loss of the Republican presidential nomination to Abraham Lincoln was widely attributed to the machinations of New York 'Tribune' editor Horace Greeley.

"Seward flounders in the water at the end of a pier, crying, 'Oh I'm going down for the last time.' He holds aloft 'Greeleys Letter.' Henry J. Raymond, founder of the 'New York Daily News' and an ardent Republican, grabs Greeley by the collar, accusing him, 'Ah, ha my fine fellow! I've caught you! You pushed him over for revenge.'

"Greeley pleads, 'Oh no Sir I didn't, he went too near the edge and fell off.' 'Courier & Enquirer' editor James Watson Webb (appearing at left, as a newsboy) exclaims, 'Take him in Officer he did push him off. I saw him do it.' Webb carries a copy of his own newspaper, inscribed with the motto 'Principles not men,' which may allude to Webb's recent abandonment of the Whig party for the Republicans" [Reilly].

Confederates Capture the Steamer Maple Leaf!

Dale writes that the Maple Leaf is at Norfolk taking in coal, and "I suppose you have read of her capture by Rebs...." The Maple Leaf was overpowered by the Confederate prisoners it was carrying; about seventy of them escaped.

Dale recounts that "We were bound to Ft. Delaware from Ft. Monroe with about 90 Rebel prisoners with a guard of 10 men, when outside of Cape Henry 6 miles they took the arms from the guards." The Rebels forced the Captain to sail near the shore, then lowered small boats for their escape.

The Maple Leaf -- or, rather, its remnants-- is now a National Historic Landmark in Jacksonville, Florida. A Confederate explosive blew her up in 1864. $275.00

He Killed “A Worthy and Beautiful Wife, and Four Pleasant Children”
"Beadle was a poor unfortunate who exterminated his family and himself. 'It appears he had for some time before, carried to his bed every night an ax and a carving knife'."

[McDade, recording several other accounts of the crime but not this one]. To the perplexed, who are possibly confused about the source of evil in the world, Dana explains, "The plain truth is, that moral evil proceeds not from the Creator, but from the creature."

A long footnote to Dana's Sermon, extracted from the Connecticut Courant, says that Beadle married "an amiable woman, of a reputable family, by whom he had four lovely and promising children, one son and three daughters." He brought "the knife, the ax and pistols, as weapons of death... to his bed-chamber. With the utmost secrecy, unperceived by any, he destroyed a worthy and beautiful wife, in the midst of life, and four pleasant children, sleeping in their beds..."

34. [Davis, Jefferson]: "THE KING CONSIDERS" | "GO BRING OVER TO ME MY MARYLAND" [Port Jefferson, L.I.]: Wm. M. Davis, 1862. Carte de Visite, photograph of a
On the verso: "From an Original Oil Painting by Wm. M. Davis, of Port Jefferson, L.I. 1862." The carte was a response to Lee's incursion into Maryland in 1862, an effort to convert that Border Slave State to the Confederacy.

William M. Davis (1829 - 1920) "exhibited at the National Academy of Design and the Brooklyn Art Association while living in New York City. Once he returned to Long Island, he exhibited exclusively in Port Jefferson, with the exception of a one-man show in Bridgeport, Connecticut in 1894. According to the Bridgeport Daily Standard, Davis showed 135 of his works and had over 700 people in attendance. A major retrospective titled Port Jefferson's Foremost Painter: W.M. Davis was held at the Historical Society Museum of Greater Port Jefferson in 1973. Davis's works are housed in prestigious private collections and institutions, including the Suffolk Museum, Stony Brook, N.Y; the Society for the Preservation of Long Island Antiquities, and the New York State Historical Society, Cooperstown" [online site of the Helmuth Stone gallery].

Womanly Jefferson Davis

35. [Davis, Jefferson]: "THE STERN STATESMAN," MRS. D. PLEASE DON'T PROVOKE THE PRESIDENT AS HE MIGHT HURT SOME OF YOU'NS. [np: 1865]. Carte de visite, 2-1/8" x 3-1/2," laid down on card stock. Jefferson Davis, in a formal woman's dress with hat, is carrying a knife as he runs away from pursuing Union soldiers in the background. Mrs. Davis warns the soldiers not to "provoke the President." Very Good.
It was rumored that, when Jefferson Davis was captured at War's end, he had disguised himself in a woman's dress. That this was not so did not discourage anyone from telling the story.

The verso contains a gift inscription, dated 24 May 1865, from Jno. McAllister to Francis Hoffman: "Thanks for the -----. Will write in a few days- accept a caricature, which is named in compliment to our friend. Read 'The Stern Statesman'. . . May 24, 1865."

The International Center of Photography has a copy. We have not located any other record of this satirical illustration, despite diligent search. Leland's 'Ye Book of Copperheads,' published in 1863, contains a caricature of a 'Stern Statesman,' a recruiter for the Confederacy, portrayed with a rattlesnake labeled 'S. Massachusetts Anti-Slavery Men Coalesce as Republicans

Marsh, an original member of the Republican Party, founded the previous year, won his election for Treasurer of Massachusetts. His correspondents were abolitionists Nathaniel Banks and Seth Ward, officers of the Republican Convention that nominated him. Banks was a Massachusetts Congressman who became Speaker of the House in 1856 after a contentious struggle; Lincoln would make him a Major General.

The Convention, an amalgam of anti-slavery Whigs and Democrats, Free Soil men, and Know-Nothings, determined to unite for their "one grand object," preventing the expansion of Slavery. Marsh explains "that the exigencies of the times require the hearty co-operation of the friends of freedom against the incroachments of the slave power. I am disposed to unite with all those who are desirous of securing so desirable a result as is proposed in the address and resolutions put forth at Worcester by the Convention, over which you had the honor to preside."
Connecticut Jacksonians vs. Whigs

38. [Election of 1836]: ADDRESS, &C. [Hartford? 1836]. [1], 4-16 pp, as issued. 10" x 6-3/4," on two folding unopened sheets. Spotting. Untrimmed and uncut. One small chip affects a couple of words. Good. At the bottom of page 16: "Committees will be furnished with this Pamphlet, at Two Dollars per hundred copies- at short notice. Packages can be safely forwarded by State to almost every part of this State."

Connecticut's Democratic Party supports Martin Van Buren in the 1836 presidential elections and excoriates the Whig Party, which had recently organized in opposition to Jacksonian Democracy. The pamphlet warns of "the dangerous and pernicious tendencies of monopolies and special legislation," and the importance of maintaining "equal rights" and "principles of democracy." Whigs, like their Federalist ancestors, advocate "a preference of kingly over republican government." Page twelve begins a "Short Review of the Acts and Proceedings of the last General Assembly," emphasizing the monarchical tendencies of the opposition.

The pamphlet concludes at page 16 with a satiric skewering of the Whigs: "The Shorter Catechism for the Use of 'Whig' Boys of All Ages." "Q. Who arrogate to themselves all the respectability, all the talents, all the morality, and all the religion in the land? A. The 'Whigs'." 41. Eliot, Andrew: THE FAITHFUL STEWARD. A SERMON DELIVERED...AT HIS ORDINATION TO THE PASTORAL CHARGE OF THE NEW NORTH CHURCH IN BOSTON, IN CONJUNCTION WITH THE REV. MR. WEBB. ON APRIL 14, 1742.
A colloquially spoken Sermon on the proper limits of ecclesiastical authority and the dangers of the Great Awakening. Eliot's endorsement of autonomy of conscience became part of the religious and political ethos of 18th century New England.

The Clergy's "Authority extends only to...things of a spiritual Nature. Nor even here is their Government absolute; they have no Right in an arbitrary Manner to dictate to their People what they ought to believe or to practice." But a Minister must prevent "those committed to his Charge to feed upon poisonous Food." Hence, he warns against ministers who "set up their own whims and fantastick Notions." In such a case, "their People are not obliged, nay ought not to obey them."

Confederates Ready to Go Home

"We are still in the mountains, encamped in the bushes and rocks, where no one can see us or we seen anyone. Since the middle of last week we have had a most miserable time out in the rain and storms without shelter and with very short rations. We could have built some kind of protection against the rain but the general says we are not to remain here very long and will not let us prepare anything so we set by the fire and sleep in the daytime to avoid the cold.

"I think you all can make yourselves comfortable and have no fears of the Rebels troubling you this winter as our army is strong enough to keep them from crossing into Maryland. No fighting has taken place of any consequence lately. About two prisoners was brought in today. They were captured last Saturday, they look well and hearty but say they are tired of the war. Especially since McClellan has been nominated by the Copperhead party for President. They do not like him. They say anybody but him and hope it will soon be over and all may return to their homes. The prospect for peace looks very bright from Atlanta & Mobile. Shelbyville, Illinois: 1861. Single leaf, written in ink manuscript on recto only. Old folds. Water damage deletes several words, Good+.

Described as a "strident" Unionist, Peckham was a Missouri State legislator before the War. "He left the legislature and organized the 8th MO Regiment. Peckham served as the 8th MO Regiment's Lt. Col. and led the regiment at Shiloh and Pittsburg Landing, TN, and at Jackson, MS. He later went on to lead the 29th MO. After the war he published a book on the history of the war in Missouri and General Nathaniel Lyon. He passed away in 1869 and is buried at Bellefontaine Cemetery in St. Louis, MO" [online Pamplin Historical Park & National Museum of the Civil War Soldier].
Reverend Finkbine of the Methodist Protestant Church, and President of its Illinois Conference, sent Peckham this admiring Letter, from Shelbyville, Illinois, March 12 1861: "In looking over the Missouri Democrat of March 9th I find your speech reported, in opposition to the reception of the Georgian Commissioner, to address the Legislature of your state; Permit me, Sir, to [illegible] an entire stranger to you, and in all probability shall never have the honour of an introduction to you to congratulate you on the very happy, eloquent, and withering [illegible] you gave that commissioner and all who affiliate with him, in your noble manly and dignified defense of the institutions of our common country, the will of your constituents, and the solemnity of your oath; I am happy to know we have men among us who have nerve and moral honesty enough left with them to Beard the Lyon in his den. Altho I live in the state of Ill, I feel a great anxiety that the state of Missouri may be preserved in the Union, and the Republican principles which had been heretofore enjoyed by your state and had been fostered by the general Government may be continued; and the merciful interpositions of the Providence of God for good, may still favour your, and my, State, until we shall be willing to live under the folds of the Stars and Stripes in the union, and our depressed, and downtrodden brethren of Europe may still look to us as presenting them a Beacon, to come and shelter themselves in the land of the free, and the home of the Brave, allow me my dear Sir to wish you long life, and much usefulness, in your Public avocations, allowing me my dear Sir to wish you long life, and much usefulness, in your Public avocations, in defending the Principles of the Republican Party, and your constituents, which I fully believe to be the Principles of the Bible of God. Most truly and respectfully I am your [obedient servant] T. Finkbine, President of the Illinois Annual Con. Methodist Protestant Church.

"The above is only intended for you. personal personal."

We offer also an excerpt from the newspaper describing Peckham's speech, "denying that the Republican party wished "to carry fire and the sword into the Southern States. On the other hand, it was the object of Southern traitors to plunge the country into all the horrors of civil war. . . The Southern Democracy got restless under his speech, and the usual course of spittooning, or legislative mob law, was resorted to, but it did not have its desired effect.

Andrew Foote Reflects On His Career,
A Month Before His Death

Rear Admiral Foote describes his entire military career, with dates of promotions and posts, beginning "on the 4th day of Decr 1822 as a Midshipman. . . In the month of Aug 1861 I was promoted to the rank of Captain and soon afterwards was ordered at the command of the western flotilla, and in the month of Nov. of that year was appointed 'Flag Officer' of that fleet. In this service I commanded a squadron which captured Fort Henry on the Tennessee river, participated in the capture of Fort Donelson, captured the city of Clarksville, and received the surrender of Island No. 10. on the Mississippi river..."
Explaining how he ended up in his current role, he "was detached in the month of May from the command of the squadron by the Navy Department, and was appointed Chief of Bureau of Equipment & recruiting. In the month of June, after having received a note of thanks by Congress, was selected as one of the nine[?] Rear Admirals in the Navy." Foote was preparing to take command of the South Atlantic Blockading Squadron when he suddenly died from a kidney disease, a little over a month after writing this letter.

A Report from the Editor of the Baltimore American

50. Fulton, C.C.: AUTOGRAPH LETTER, SIGNED, FROM FORTRESS MONROE, BEGINNING 3 SEPTEMBER [1863], TO HON. G.V. FOX, ASST SEC. NAVY, DESCRIBING NAVAL MANEUVERS AND BATTLES AROUND FORT SUMTER AND CHARLESTON HARBOR; AND REPORTING UNION VICTORY AT FORT WAGNER ON 9 SEPTEMBER. Single leaf, 7-7/8" x 9-7/8." Entirely in ink manuscript on recto and verso. Light wear, Light pencil crossout in final paragraph. Very Good.

Fulton, editor and publisher of the Baltimore American, intended his battle report for publication in his newspaper. "Mr. Fox will please telegraph the foregoing to American.
Remainder is contraband." The "Contraband" portion, written at the end, explains: "It is intention Admiral to endeavor force whole fleet Monitors through obstructions and anchor in Rebellion Roads. Party volunteers organized to open way through obstructions. Schr. Shark dismantled and loaded with powder to float against obstructions and explode."

Fulton's battle report is in exciting detail. On the Fort Wagner victory, for example, he writes, "Operations Gen Gillmore progressing great vigor. His approaches so close Wagner that combatants throwing stones and hand grenades. On Wednesday drove enemy from rifle pits on left, advanced lines hundred yards and captured seventy-eight prisoners, including two officers. Mounting new guns all round island many of them to shell city."

For the assault on Fort Sumter Fulton was significantly off the mark. He predicted victory, noting "Admiral in good spirits and confident of success."

From the National Portrait Gallery description on line: "The 1780s and 1790s saw the anti-slavery debate gather strength and support. This shocking print depicts an infamous incident described during William Wilberforce's motion for the abolition of the slave trade in 1791. 'Among numberless other acts of cruelty daily practised, an English negro driver, because a young negro through sickness was unable to work, threw him into a copper of boiling sugar juice, and after keeping him steeped over head and ears for above three quarters of an hour in the boiling liquid whipt him with such severity, that it was near six months before he recover'd of his wounds and scalding'. On the wall behind a selection of rodents and the body parts of black slaves are nailed, thus suggesting slaves were treated like vermin.

Gillray executed a number of prints with pro-abolition themes, including 'Anti-saccharrites, - or - John Bull and his family leaving off the use of sugar' (1792). Wilberforce's campaign for the abolition of the slave trade achieved success in 1807 but it was not until the 1838 Slavery Abolition Act that all slaves in the British Empire were granted their freedom.

Early Printing of
“One of the Great American State Papers”

This, along with the American Museum's January 1792 issue, is one of the earliest printings of Hamilton's foundation report on manufactures, One of them is its earliest magazine printing.

Hamilton issued his report on December 5, 1791, which occupies pages 33-75 of our copy. On the title page’s verso the editors explain, ”A review of several new publications, and sundry miscellaneous articles, are unavoidably postponed till next month, to make room for the report on manufactures. As this subject will shortly engage the attention of congress, and as copies of the report are not to be had, we have been induced to present it to our readers entire."

"One of the great American state papers, the Magna Carta of industrial America" [Howes]. The Philadelphia edition, issued in folio by Childs & Swaine in 1791, was its first printing. Hamilton presciently envisioned the path by which the Nation, following the principles that he so persuasively advocates, would expand its manufactures and become a great power. "As the successive reports of the Secretary were studied, the scale of his ideas gradually became evident. He was not merely planning a fiscal system, but doing it in such a way as to strengthen the central government and develop the resources of the country, to stimulate trade and capitalistic enterprises, and to bring about a more symmetrical balance between agriculture and industry" [DAB].

One of the Earliest Printings of Hamilton's Report on Redemption of the Public Debt

This is one of the very earliest printings of Hamilton's ground-breaking Treasury Department Report, dated November 30, 1792. He issued it "in obedience to two resolutions of the House of Representatives" directing him to report a plan for redemption of the debt, and "reimbursement of the Loan made of the Bank of the United States."

Hamilton's Report delineates "the most eligible means of providing for the execution of that important object." He worries that the "continuance of the present Indian war" is likely to "exhaust the product of the existing revenues." Hamilton urges, first, that existing revenues should be used for "occasional purchases of the debt when not exhausted by [other] exigencies." He would then create "an annual fund" for gradual reduction and ultimate elimination of the public debt, proposing specific funding sources and annual amounts for the redemption over a nine-year period, demonstrated by accompanying Tables A, B, C, and D. $950.00
“We Cast From Us With Scorn the Arrogant and Insolent Propositions Made to Our Commissioners by Abraham Lincoln”

Responding to the Conference at Hampton Roads between President Lincoln and Confederate Vice President Stephens, the 36th & 60th regiments and 45th battalion of Virginia Infantry (Smith's Brigade, Wharton's Division) resolve "unanimously" that, "after four years of terrible war with the savage foe who seeks our subjection, we are still firm in our determination to achieve our independence or to perish nobly struggling for it." They will "hail with joy" a "peace which brings to us the recognition of our independence and assigns us our proper place in the family of nations." But "we cast from us with scorn the arrogant and insolent propositions recently made to our Commissioners by Abraham Lincoln."

At the Conference Lincoln had made clear, to the dismay of both Stephens and Horace Greeley, the New York Tribune editor who had instigated the meeting, that peace could occur only by the Confederacy's surrender, restoration of the Union, and adherence to the Emancipation Proclamation.

New York City’s Merchant Trade in Mid-19th Century

58. Husted, Henry P.: REGISTER OF HENRY P. HUSTED'S WATERFRONT IMPORTS WAREHOUSE, NEW YORK CITY, SEPTEMBER 1854 - APRIL 1859. New York: 1854-1859. Folio, 11'' x 17'', preprinted register with tabbed index and lined pages. [13-index], 638pp [manuscript entries total 425pp, other pages blank]. Full contemporary calf, [rubbed, worn through at edges and spine], front hinge split, index leaves coming detached. Occasional later owner's doodles (most notably on page 390), some spotting. Else, contents Very Good. With several loose invoices and receipts from the 1850s.
This register is a window on the merchant trade in New York City during the 1850s. The detailed entries name the ship, its port of origin, owner, date and description of cargo, date of withdrawal, fees charged.

Merchants sometimes left their goods in the warehouse for a year or more. For example, the first entry is for 300 cases of licorice from Liverpool left in the warehouse on 20 September 1854; and retrieved in three batches in February 1856. Other cargoes left with Husted include oil, borax, cigars, wine, coffee, yarn, silk, hemp, raisins, rubber, and more, mostly from international ports in Europe, Latin America, and Asia, such as Belize, Canton, Havre, Soudan, Foo Choo Foo, Calcutta, Penang, Manilla, Marseilles, and Havana.

Henry Peter Husted (1804-1870), born in Connecticut, lived briefly in New York in the 1830s, and settled in New Jersey after he married Deborah Frost Chadeayne [1805-1870] in 1836. New York City Directories from the late 1840s and 1850s list his bonded warehouse at 214 & 221 South St. Henry may have been buried in his hometown of Stamford, Connecticut, as his name is listed on his parents’ headstone at Newfield Cemetery there.

Among merchants listed, Moses H. Grinnell [1803-1877] of the merchant and shipping firm of Grinnell, Minturn & Co. was a Congressman from New York's 3d District [1839-1841], president of the New York Chamber of Commerce, Collector of the Port of New York, and Central Park Commissioner. Josiah Macy [1785-1872] and his sons William and Josiah Jr. owned a mercantile firm in New York City. The business started dealing in oil and owned more than 30 whaling vessels. After the Civil War, the firm opened one of the first oil refineries in New York and was later bought out by the Standard Oil Company under the Rockefellers. [Blume: HISTORICAL DICTIONARY OF THE U.S. MARITIME INDUSTRY, Scarecrow Press: 2012, pp. 258-259; The Josiah Macy Jr. Foundation, Website accessed 11/1/2017.]

Henry J. and Charles J. Baker organized the glassworks firm of H.J. Baker & Brother in New York City in 1850 following a great fire at their similar business in Baltimore. They rebuilt in Baltimore and opened the firm in New York City where they were able to have imported French glass and chemicals. Burdett & Noble was a merchant firm in New York City. Charles P. Burdett was later a Trustee of the Atlantic Mutual Insurance Co. Otto W. Pollitz was partnered with William H. Westervelt in the firm O.W. Pollitz & Co. which offered drugs and general merchandise, including a range of imported medicinal products. The merchandise firm of Cramer & Abegg was appointed as sole agent of Heidsieck & Co. Champaigne business on January 1, 1854; Charles Heidsieck, the owner, being credited with popularizing Champagne in the United States in the 1850s. F. Cousinery & Co. were commission merchants and importers of French and Mediterranean Products. Schieffelin Brothers & Co. were importers of drugs, fancy goods, perfumery, druggist sundries, etc. William A. Sale & Co. were East India and China chipping merchants.

59. Jefferson, Thomas: NOTES ON THE STATE OF VIRGINIA. WRITTEN BY THOMAS JEFFERSON. Philadelphia: Prichard and Hall, 1788. [4], 244, [4 bookseller advts] pp, as issued. Woodcut map of Madison's Cave at page [20]; folding letterpress table on the Indians of Virginia [archival restoration at blank outer margin and reinforcement of fold, text unaffected]. The folding and in-text tables describe and compare Quadrupeds of Europe and America; the Birds of Virginia, rainfall, settlers, militia, Indians, crimes, trade. Original calf [hinges, spine ends, corners with expert restoration], gilt-lettered spine title on red morocco, gilt spine rules. First Prichard advertisement leaf has a small chip, affecting three letters. Light foxing. Very Good, with interesting provenance.

This first American edition of Jefferson's most significant work has an extremely interesting provenance. The first front free endpaper is signed by Judith C. Lewis; the second by her father, Robert Lewis [and dated 1787]. "The tenth son of Betty and Fielding Lewis, Robert Lewis was also George Washington's nephew and served as his secretary between 1789 to 1791. During this time period Lewis escorted his aunt, Martha Washington, and her grandchildren from Mount Vernon to the presidential mansion in New York. Lewis, however, was paid less than any of Washington's other secretaries, whose salaries were twice as high. Lewis also served as a temporary manager at Mount Vernon from 1790-1792, during the illness of his cousin, George Augustine Washington. At the end of Lewis' term at Mount Vernon, George Washington placed Lewis in charge of managing his lands in western Virginia. In 1793, Washington gave Lewis a plot of inherited land in Stafford County, and provided a larger piece of inherited land in 1796 in Fauquier County. Later in life, Lewis was elected several times to the office of mayor in Fredericksburg, Virginia" [online article on Lewis at the Mount Vernon web site].

The Advertisement, dated 27 February 1787, explains that "The following Notes were written in Virginia in the year 1781, and somewhat corrected and enlarged in the winter of 1782, in answer to Queries proposed to the Author, by a Foreigner of Distinction, then residing among us. . . He had a few copies printed, which he gave among his friends: and a translation of them has been lately published in France, but with such alterations as the laws of the press in that country rendered necessary. They are now offered to the public in their original form and language."

———. "The Struggle in Maryland for the Freedom of Conscience"

Brackenridge had a remarkable career— as a lawyer in Maryland and Pennsylvania, district attorney for the Orleans Territory, author of a foundation work on the War of 1812 and other subjects [Howes B684 et seq.], Judge of West Florida and, at the time of his efforts in behalf of the "Jew Bill," a delegate to the Maryland General Assembly. His prefatory Advertisement explains why he published this book: "The struggle in Maryland for the freedom of conscience, is one which at the time excited a deep interest; and every victory of CORRECT PRINCIPLES— every triumph of FREEDOM, should be carefully recorded in perpetuum rei memoriam."

Maryland's 1776 Constitution required, as a condition of holding "any office of trust or profit," that the applicant express a "declaration of belief in the Christian religion." This provision was good for Maryland Catholics but bad for its Jews, who were thus excluded from public office and other activities, such as the practice of law. Article VI of the Federal Constitution prohibited the imposition of any religious test for office; and the First Amendment to the Federal Constitution barred religious establishments. But these limitations bound only the Federal government, not the States. However, the federal clauses were a rallying point for repeal of State religious proscriptions. Repeal efforts began in 1797 and continued for the next generation until, in 1826, the Maryland Legislature passed "An Act to extend to the sect of people professing the Jewish religion the same rights and privileges that are enjoyed by Christians." It stated, "Every citizen of this state professing the Jewish religion... appointed to any office of public trust [shall] make and subscribe a declaration of his belief in a future state of rewards and punishments, in the stead of the declaration now required."
Brackenridge eloquently argued, "An odious exclusion from any of the benefits common to the rest of my fellow-citizens, is a persecution, differing only in degree, but of a nature equally unjustifiable with that, whose instruments are chains and torture. In our land of equal rights and equal pretensions to the dignity and emolument of office, to be subjected to a degrading exception, is by no means a nominal punishment... [I]t was the will of heaven to open here, AN ASYLUM TO THE PERSECUTED OF EVERY NATION! We are placed here to officiate in that magnificent temple; to us is assigned the noble task of stretching forth the hand of charity, to all those unfortunate men, whom the political tempests of the world may have cast upon our shores."

The speeches of Brackenridge's allies, William G. D. Worthington and John S. Tyson, are also recorded here. Worthington read the entire correspondence between the Jews of Newport and President Washington, and quoted from letters that were exchanged between the first President and the other Jewish communities. Brackenridge adds several other speeches emphasizing the primacy of Americans' Natural Rights.

Stockbridge's “River Indians”

Field discusses the book at length, explaining that "Stockbridge, in Massachusetts, was the residence of the Stockbridge Housatonic Muh-he-ka-ne-ok (Mohegan) Indians. They were called by the English, 'River Indians,' a fair translation of their name, which signified 'The people of the ever flowing waters'."

E.W.B. Canning's preface, a eulogy for the recently deceased Miss Jones, celebrates her "untiring spirit" and "diligence." She had "no claims to profound erudition" but is "a plain, sensible woman" who "wrote for the preservation and exhibition of truth."

In pencil, a few fox spots and light wear. Very Good. An informative letter on the trials and tribulations of camp life.

". . . I can't get over losing my splendid O-C- [overcoat]. It will be a great while till I get another such. It would be worth $1000 at present in "Confed"--But it is gone. You should not send my flannel yet--I will let you know when I need it. I have contracted a severe cold and have sore throat also but it is caused by getting wet. We have had so much rain during the past few weeks. We have much trouble keeping dry in our tent during the late heavy rains. We have almost been submerged in water several nights...."
"I should not be surprised if we went up toward Winchester today. Ramseur's division went up as far as Winchester yesterday. Anderson's corps which was camped close around town for some days past left yesterday--some say for Richmond or Petersburg. I have little doubt it is true. So we go up as far as 'Fisher's Hill' soon. We have marching orders now and if the enemy press us we go soon. They dare not follow us farther than Strasburg.

"Friday night Sept 16, 1864. It has been rather unpleasant in camp during the past few weeks. Raining so much, making it muddy. I have not heard from Richmond yet. Expecting to know my fate very soon. We have had more sickness in camp since the late damp rainy weather. Mostly colds and fever. We have just received orders to have 2 days rations prepared by 2 o'clock tomorrow afternoon. to go on a raid, I suppose, as the wagons are ordered to remain in the rear. We most likely will go to Martinsburg. The Yankees have fallen back several miles since the little fight we had with them Tuesday last between this point and Berryville. The main force of the enemy are between Berryville and Charlestown."

Praise for Baltimore's Copperhead Police Marshal

63. [Kane, George Proctor]: SONG. MARSHALL KANE. AIR----- "ROSEAS DREAM." [np: 1861]. Broadside, 4-1/2" x 10-3/4." Nine four-line verses within a decorative border. Trimmed closely at the top margin, removing the border. Lightly spotted. Cut of exotic scene under tree, turbaned man dresses wounded arm of man draped with cloth among horses and palm trees, with a city in the background. Good+. The first verse: "Come and listen to my story, / From all lies I will refrain, / While I sing of great injustice / Practised on our Marshall Kane."

President Lincoln and Secretary of State Seward tried to scrub Maryland clean of Copperheads after a Baltimore mob attacked Massachusetts troops headed for Washington in April 1861. The City Fathers burned railroad bridges north from Maryland; and its secession-minded legislature convened. The arrested City leaders included Baltimore's police marshal, George Proctor Kane; and mayor George William Brown.

This song praises Marshall Kane, who "is just and good by nature, / Upright honest hearted soul, / He loves the truth, and scorns the traitor, / His works will receive the eternal goal." His oppressors-- Generals Butler and Banks-- are warned, "God will open Fort McHenry / And set free dear MARSHALL KANE."

[2], vi, [2], 508; viii, 528; viii, 413; viii, 550 pp. Title leaf of each volume with an old rubberstamp. Otherwise, light foxing and a Very Good text. Bound in matching modern, bright cloth, with gilt-lettered morocco spine labels.

The first edition of a classic American legal work. "England has only furnished one Blackstone, and the American rival equals him in classic purity and elegance of style, and surpasses him in extent and copiousness of learning. What do Sir William Blackstone's Commentaries contain... which are discussed with such richness and accuracy by Chancellor Kent? Scarcely nothing, and a comparison... shows the American author to have surpassed his rival in comprehensiveness of research, and fulness of illustration, and to have equalled him in clearness and cogency of reasoning" [Marvin].

Larned calls it a "great work... marked by a firm grasp of essentials, by explicit statement of fundamental principles, and by a clear, unaffected, straightforward style, which avoids any pedantic exhibition of learning."

_"We Have Orders to Keep Two Days Rations in Our Haversacks And Ready at a Moment’s Notice"

65. Kirby, Isaac Minor: AUTOGRAPH LETTER, SIGNED, TO HIS FATHER, FROM CAMP IN KENTUCKY, 12 FEBRUARY 1862. Camp Wood: 1862. Single leaf, written in ink manuscript on recto and verso. Light fading, Very Good. Accompanied by stamped (3 cents) envelope addressed to Dr. Jacob Kirby, Hillsborough, Ohio, with postal cancel [tear at upper right corner affecting the cancel].

Ohio General McCook established Camp Wood, from which Kirby writes, near Munfordville Kentucky. Kirby enlisted as Captain of Company I, 15th Regiment, Ohio Volunteer Infantry from April 20, 1861 to August 28, 1861; reenlisted as Captain of Company D, 15th Regiment, OVI, on September 12, 1861 and resigned on May 12, 1862 to reenlist as Captain of Company F, 101st Regiment, Ohio Volunteer Infantry on July 30, 1862.
He was promoted to Major with Field and Staff, 101st Regiment on October 14, 1862; promoted to Colonel on December 26, 1862 after the Battle of Stone River, Tennessee; and placed in command of First Brigade, First Division, Fourth Army Corps on June 10, 1864. He was breveted Brigadier General on January 12, 1865 and mustered out on June 12, 1865.

Kirby assures that he has recovered nicely from an undisclosed infirmity. "The difficulty is that people (some physicians) don't give me credit for half the strength that I have got. Most of them fail to stand as much as I do... I would even come home now to satisfy you that I was well if it were not that we have orders to keep two days rations in our haversacks and ready at a moment's warning. I suppose it is merely to watch Buckner If he should attempt to go over the Tennessee River. We would by a rapid march cut him off. The roads are so terrible and weather so bad that I have no idea that we will move from here for some time unless some such necessity compels us. Lieut. Culbertson has received his commission as Capt. but there is no vacancy. There seems to have been some mistake in Columbus in regard to a vacancy in our regt. Culbertson will continue to hold his place in my company as Lieut. and if there was a command for him he would not leave me so long as I needed his services. I don't pretend to do anything till I get entirely well. Culbertson takes full command off my hands. We don't miss Bachtell. Our sergeants are valuable men, all understand and perform their duties well. Pettit is worth his weight in gold to us. There are few companies that have commissioned officers equal to him--particularly fortunate in both commissioned and noncommissioned officers. All admit that I am unequalled in that way. So you see I can afford to be sick and not trouble myself about the company."

Writing upside down on the recto, he advises, "We have official notice that our recruiting officers will recruit for our regiment alone."

Accompanied by stamped (3 cents) envelope addressed to Dr. Jacob Kirby, Hillsborough, Ohio. $275.00

Appraised Value of “Traveller” and “Lucy,” With Lee’s Notes

Traveller, of course, was Lee's horse. "In 1864, after the horse became truly famous, he was appraised at $4,600 Confederate" [online, "From War Horse To Saddle Horse." American Saddlebred Magazine, November/December 1998].
Lee's second most famous horse, "Lucy Long was a present to General Lee from General J.E.B. Stuart in 1862, when the former was conducting the Sharpsburg campaign. She was a low, easy moving, and quite sorrel mare. Continuing on...she was low, and easy to mount, and her gaits were easy. General Lee rode her quite constantly until toward the close of the war, when she was found to be in foal and sent to the rear" ['Robert E. Lee's Other Horse,' online in Keith Harris History; internal quotation marks omitted]. $10,000.00

"No Single Writer, Except Jeremy Bentham, has Written So Much Upon Codification, or as Learnedly, as Livingston"

Livingston, a disciple of Bentham, presents the philosophical underpinnings of his penal system. "No single writer, except Jeremy Bentham, has written so much upon Codification, or as learnedly, as Livingston. His Codes are much admired for their philosophy, apparent practicability, and the characteristic wisdom of their provisions, which place their author among the best writers upon legislation...His writings deserve the attention of legislators, and will remain a lasting monument of his industry, wisdom, and learning" [Marvin 471]. Sir Henry Maine called him "the first legal genius of modern times" [DAB].

A leader of the Codification movement, Livingston thus favored laws made democratically by legislatures rather than by Judges exercising common-law prerogatives. Opposing conceptions of the law as an arcane discipline, fit only for experts, he insisted that laws be written clearly and in plain language, so that citizens may understand them in order to guide their own behavior and to hold judges accountable for their actions.

The 'Definitions' has "No imprint. Attributed to Benjamin Levy & Co., Printers, because this firm printed other portions of Livingston's codes and because typography and format are consistent with Levy's other work" [Jumonville].

A contemporary owner of this book explains on the rear free endpaper Livingston's contributions to the law: Louisiana "observed a set of civil rules strangely compounded of English case-law, French code law, and Spanish usages. The consolidation of this mass of incongruous jurisprudence was determined upon, and after more than one unsuccessful experiment, it was confided to the first legal genius of modern times—Mr. Livingston. “Satire on South Carolina’s Role as Instigator of Secessionism”

69. Magee, John L.: THE FOX WITHOUT A TAIL. A CUNNING FOX HAVING LOST HIS TAIL IN A TRAP TO SAVE HIMSELF FROM RIDICULE CALLED A CONVENTION OF THE OTHER FOXES AND STATED TO THEM THAT HAVING FOUND HIS TAIL A GREAT INCUMBRANCE HE HAD CUT IT OFF, AND
Reilly explains, "A satire on South Carolina's role as instigator of secessionism in the South. The artist may be lampooning the convention of seceded states which assembled at Montgomery, Alabama, on February 4, 1861. The prominent leaders of the Confederate states are portrayed as foxes. The chief fox [the one 'without a tail'] is South Carolina governor Francis Pickens. . . Here he tries to entice the others into giving up their tails as well."

Pickens stands "on a pedestal supported on the back of a crouching black man, Pickens holds aloft a document 'Secession'." Jefferson Davis, holding a large ax, is present, along with the foxes 'Florida,' 'Texas,' and other seceded states. Toombs, Jacob Thompson, and representations of other players are also present.

From Cornell's description: "By the time Lincoln took office in April of 1861, seven states had already seceded from the Union in protest. This secession cartoon depicts the elected representatives of those seven Confederate states, and compares their situation to Aesop's fable 'The Fox Without a Tail.' In that fable, a cunning fox, having lost his tail in a trap, seeks to save himself from ridicule by convincing his fellow foxes to follow suit by cutting off their tails, claiming that he had found his own to be a great encumbrance."
A Dangerous Dictator

This rare broadside, urging the defeat of President Jackson in the upcoming election, is printed in three columns. It is followed by six columns, consisting of hundreds of printed names of Portland citizens endorsing its sentiments.

Despite his promises to the contrary, Jackson has expanded the power of the presidency, reneged on his promise to serve only one term, and enthusiastically practiced the Spoils System. "The expenses of his administration have largely exceeded those of any of his six predecessors." He has claimed the power of "interpreting for himself" the Constitution, although contradicted by "the Supreme Judiciary."

S.S. Marshall’s Unrecorded Rebuttal of the Charge That He is a “Member of the Knights of the Golden Circle”

Marshall writes from McLeansboro, Illinois, "To the Editor of the Chicago Tribune," with a date of September 12, 1862. Try as we might, we have failed to locate a bibliographical record of his Letter, which he himself evidently arranged to print.

Marshall was a life-long Democrat, and especially wary of political parties based on sectional interests, i.e., Slavery. However, he signed on to the war effort with a full-throated call to put down the southern traitors. Nevertheless, Marshall advises in this Letter that an article in the August 30th Missouri Democrat had named him "as an officer (Adjutant General) of a treasonable organization in the State of Illinois." In response, he says, he responded to the Missouri Democrat, asserting that such an organization was "infamous and treasonable." The Democrat published his denunciation.

Now Marshall has learned "that the charge had its origin in that common sewer of defamation, the Chicago Tribune," which called him a member of the Knights of the Golden Circle. Marshall asserts his bona fides as a true Union man, denounces the "infamous falsehood" of "an unprincipled slanderer, liar and scoundrel. I defy the malice of the whole hireling pack."

Foundations of a Just Republican Society

73. [Massachusetts]: DEBATES, RESOLUTIONS AND OTHER PROCEEDINGS; OF THE CONVENTION OF THE COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS, CONVENED AT BOSTON, ON THE 9TH OF JANUARY 1788, AND CONTINUED UNTIL THE 7TH OF FEBRUARY FOLLOWING, FOR THE PURPOSE OF ASSenting TO AND RATIFYING THE CONSTITUTION RECOMMENDED BY THE GRAND FEDERAL CONVENTION. TOGETHER WITH THE YEAS AND NAYS ON THE DECISION OF THE GRAND QUESTION. TO WHICH THE FEDERAL CONSTITUTION IS PREFIXED. Boston: Printed and sold by Adams and Nourse, in Court-Street; and Benjamin Russell, and Edmund Freeman, in State-Street, 1788. 219, [1 blank] pp, as issued. Followed by contemporary ink manuscript index on four succeeding blank pages. Bound in modern quarter calf and marbled boards. Light to moderate foxing, Good+.

The proposed federal Constitution is printed at pages 3-19, followed by the Resolution of Submission and the Letter to Congress dated September 17, 1787, the day on which the delegates signed the Constitution. The Debates and other proceedings, commencing January 9, 1788, begin at page 23, and are reported in detail. Included are, not only the yeas and nays, but also the debates and speeches [summarized in varying degrees] of the delegates. Hancock, Adams, Gerry, Ames, King, Sedgwick, Minot, and other luminaries participated in one of the most thoughtful recorded discussions on the foundations of a just republican society, the nature of good government, and the means of protecting citizens against its encroachments.

Massachusetts ratified the Constitution on February 6, 1788, proposing amendments that would explicitly guarantee the reserved rights of the States, trial by jury, and other protections. The minority's concerns—about the absence of a Bill of Rights, the overshadowing of local governments—and their final gracious assent to the ultimate verdict against them, are also reported here.

74. Maxwell, Thomas: TUSKALOOSA, THE ORIGIN OF ITS NAME. ITS HISTORY, ETC. A PAPER READ BEFORE THE ALABAMA HISTORICAL SOCIETY, BY THOMAS MAXWELL, JULY 1, 1876. Tuskaloosa: Printed at the Office of the Tuskaloosa Gazette, [1876]. Original printed salmon wrappers [expertly reinforced and reattached]. Frontis map, titled "DeSoto's Route from Tampa Bay to the Mississippi River." [2], 86 pp. A clean text [last several leaves lightly foxed], with several signatures in blank margins of a prior owner, one E.N.C. Snow, "a prominent Tuscaloosa businessman and civic leader" whose home was at 2414 Eighth Street [Web site of Tuscaloosa Area Virtual Museum]. This is doubtless Edward Nicholas Cobb Snow (1845 - 1926). Very Good.

With a detailed index on the verso of the title page, the book takes us from the Expedition of DeSoto from Tampa Bay, through the wars with the Chickasaws, Crockett's visits, Indian
An articulate and outspoken New England clergyman for the rights of conscience, Mayhew was highly respected and a formidable opponent. "He combined the talents of a divine with those of a first-rate propagandist" [John Chester Miller, Origins of the American Revolution, page 191(1959)]. He opposed establishmentarian claims of the Church of England, not only because he supported democratic and home-grown religious institutions, but also because he viewed the Anglican Church as virtually indistinguishable from the Church of Rome. Mayhew regarded each of them as hierarchical and authoritarian; and he recoiled from them.
"The struggle over an American episcopate was much more than a religious quarrel: it was a phase of the conflict between privileged aristocracy and popular leaders that was being waged in the colonies" [Miller]. "Fear of the association of priesthood and magistracy in arbitrary rule" is a constant theme in Mayhew's works. See, Bailyn, Ideological Origins of the American Revolution. Thus Mayhew consistently advocated colonial self-determination; and opposed England's rule from afar.

Mincing no words, Mayhew launches his Discourse with an undignified dissection of Catholic doctrine, which "is as plainly absurd, self-repugnant, and impossible to be true, as any one that can be imagined." Indeed, the Catholic Church is "a filthy prostitute." Mayhew's controversy with the Church "is not merely a religious one...But a defence of our laws, liberties, and civil rights as men, in opposition to the proud claims and encroachments of ecclesiastical persons, who under the pretext of religion would engross all power and property to themselves, and reduce us to the most abject slavery."

The owner of this pamphlet was likely Rev. Jonathan Lee [1718-1788], the first minister of the Congregational Church of Salisbury, Connecticut, installed in 1744; he held the position until his death.

Not a Francophile

A Whig, Maynwaring "was a man of extreme passions and strongly held views who was confident, quick-minded, and wittily eloquent; but he preferred to act behind the scenes, lobbying ministers and courtiers, or penning the biting satires and political commentaries for which he is most famous, rather than take a leading public role in Parliament" [online History of Parliament, biography of Maynwaring].

Here he discusses the growing power of France as negotiations to conclude the War of Spanish Succession culminated at the Peace of Utrecht, resulting in British acquisition of Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, the Hudson Bay Territory, and the Island of St. Kitts from France. This is one of two editions printed in 1711, the other with 32 pages. Precedence is unclear.

Confederate Imprint?

Eight four-line verses, with chorus, within a decorative border. "We are a band of brothers, natives of the soil, / Fighting for our property we gained by honest toil; / But when our rights were threatened the cry rose near and far / Hurrah for the Bonnie Blue Flag that bears a single star." Rudolph says this song, published in a variety of southern locales, "was so popular in New Orleans that General Benjamin F. Butler deemed it advisable to impose a fine of five hundred dollars upon its publisher, A.E. Blackmar . . ."

Parrish & Willingham lists this as a Confederate imprint, despite the presence of the Maryland State Seal. Perhaps this reflects the author's optimism: "Here's to good old Maryland, although she is not out, / She's first to meet the enemy and turn them face about; / She'll join our young Confederacy that's spreading near and far, / And link her fate with the Bonnie Blue Flag that bears eleven stars."

The Peripatetic Confederate Photographer Sterling McIntyre

Confederate General Price, born in Virginia, had been a Congressman from Missouri and was a veteran of the Mexican-American War. After the Civil War, he went to Mexico in self-imposed exile.
McIntyre [born c.1816), a native of Scotland, immigrated to the U.S. in November, 1840. Having studied surgical dentistry in Paris, he opened a dental practice; newspapers and census records show him in Florida and South Carolina in the 1840s, San Francisco (CA) in 1850-1851, Nevada City (CA) in the mid-1850s, Alabama in the 1860s and 1870s, and back in California in the 1880s. Some sources suggest a temporary sojourn in Richmond, where he may have taken this photograph, which in format is like his photograph of Lee and other Confederate Generals. See, Hopkins, ROBERT E. LEE IN WAR AND PEACE, noting McIntyre's Richmond oval photo of Lee, with identical publication and copyright information; and noting that "McIntyre's notation of 'copyright secured' on his altered photograph of General Lee was quite unique in the early days of the Confederacy."

McIntyre, Sterling C.: GENL. WM. LORING, C.S.A., HOLDING HIS SWORD. [Richmond? Alabama?): Published by S.C. McIntyre, [1861?]. Photograph of General William Wing Loring, in his Confederate uniform, his right hand holding his sword. "Published by S.C. McIntyre" on left portion of the oval; "Copyright secured" on right portion of the oval. Fine,
Confederate General Loring, born in North Carolina and raised in Florida, had fought in the Seminole Wars and Mexican-American War, and had been a member of the Florida House of Representatives. After the Civil War, he joined the Egyptian Army. Not in Crandall, Parrish & Willingham, Haynes, Ellison, Owen [AL] or on OCLC as of September 2023.

Page 2 lists the officers for 1858. They included Henry Watts as President, William Biddle as Secretary-Treasurer, and seven Directors. The Report prints the findings of Chief Engineer Aug. F. Dalson in his "explorations of the mineral lands of your estate in McKean and Elk Counties."

The Mockery of “Free Labour” in the West Indies

The first illustration is titled "Free Labour. State of the West Indies." It depicts the West Indian Emancipation as a mere public relations device: a British soldier holds a gun to the head of a poorly clad black man, who holds a stick with an "Empty" pail at the end.

The second illustration is titled, "More Work for the Schoolmaster or Counterpoint made a point in National Education." The third is titled, "A Late Enquiry: of Sifting the Cinders." A dignified Lord, holding a sieve from which people are falling, inquires, "Was it a black or a white man?"

82. [Nast, Thomas]: ALBUMEN PHOTOGRAPH OF NAST'S CARICATURE OF HORACE GREELEY, EDITOR OF THE NEW YORK TRIBUNE AND ERRATIC POLITICAL GADFLY. New York: E. & H.T. Anthony, [1866]. Carte de Visite, 2" x 3-1/4." Albumen photograph of Nast's illustration of Horace Greeley, on original card mount with publisher's backmarks. Nast's facsimile signature is at the lower left corner. Next to Greeley is an issue of his NY Tribune, transformed into a black face. Very Good.

Nast's illustration originally appeared as an engraving in the Harper's issue of 14 April 1866. During the 1860s Greeley supported equal rights for freedmen. $500.00

And John Forney, Secretary of the U.S. Senate and editor of the Washington Chronicle, opposed President Johnson's efforts to deny equal rights to freedmen. Johnson, who had previously enjoyed a friendly association with Forney, dismissed Forney's charges scornfully, allegedly stating: "I do not waste my ammunition on dead ducks."
Campaigning in the midterm 1866 elections, Johnson was rebuked with the election of a veto-proof Republican majority. Hence, as the photograph suggests, Johnson himself was the "dead duck." See the online article on Forney at the website of the U.S. Senate.

Jefferson Davis as Dignified Statesman

"This lithograph depicts Jefferson Davis from the waist up, facing the viewer's right. He wears a dark suit with black bow tie and white collared shirt. His hair is parted to the side and is worn long over his ears. He is clean shaven except for a long goatee. 'Lith. & Published by Blelock & Co. 130 Canal St. New Orleans' is printed under the image" [Description of this portrait at the online Lincoln Financial Foundation Collection].

According to AAS, "Blelock & Co. were active in New Orleans from 1866 until 1868." This print is based on a pre-war Brady photograph. "Blelock and Company was active in New Orleans until the city fell to Union forces, whereupon the firm apparently moved to New York until the end of the war. It returned to Louisiana and was listed in the New Orleans city directory again by 1866. As this print bears a New Orleans address, it was most likely printed either in 1861 or after 1865" [Neely, Holzer & Boritt].

[Washington: 1938. Photograph, oblong 6-1/2" x 8-1/2." From the firm Underwood & Underwood, with its typed caption on a separate paper beneath the photograph, the caption's top margin adhering to the verso of the photograph. Fine.

"There aren't many today, outside of the FBI, who recall William Samuel Noisette but those insiders who worked at FBIHQ will recall 'Sam' if they had the occasion to go to Hoover's office. . . He was appointed a Special Agent in 1957 but remained at FBIHQ and retired finally in 1968 after serving 40 years with the FBI. Noisette's true love was painting and today, many of his paintings are scattered with FBI families and others. His art shows continued on for decades while employed with the FBI" [online article, 'Faded Glory: Dusty Roads of an FBI Era,' at web site of historical gmen].

87. [Northwest Ordinance]: THE AMERICAN MUSEUM, OR REPOSITORY OF ANCIENT AND MODERN FUGITIVE PIECES, &C. PROSE AND POETICAL FOR AUGUST 1787. VOL. II. NUMB. II. Philadelphia: Printed by Mathew Carey, 1787. Pages
105-206, [2]. Bound in modern marbled paper over boards. Title page moderately foxed with a shallow chip to blank outer margin. Short repaired tear at last leaf [no loss]. Good+.

This issue of the American Museum is loaded with significant information on the new Nation's foundation institutions. Pages 188-192 contain one of the very earliest printings of 'An Ordinance for the Government of the Territory of the United States, North West of the River Ohio.' The Ordinance, dated 13 July 1787, appeared in full in the succeeding issue of Carey's American Museum. The Ordinance guaranteed residents the commonly recognized natural rights of freemen; and Article 6th, in a rare display of political harmony, prescribed that "There shall be neither slavery nor involuntary servitude in the said territory, otherwise than in the punishment of crimes whereof the party shall have been duly convicted."

Scholarly articles also appear on paper money, manufactures, and taxation by Sylvius; Joel Barlow's July 4 oration at the Connecticut Society of the Cincinnati; Benjamin Rush's essay on the efficacy of public punishments; ex post facto laws; creation of the Pennsylvania Society for encouraging manufactures; New Jersey and the Continental Congress; the necessity of establishing a mint.

The Shooting and Tragic Death of Noble-Hearted Captain Nutt, Lizzie's Brave Father, Who Flinched Not, Like a True Soldier, to Die in Defence of His Daughter's Honor. The Great Dukes Trial at Uniontown, Pa. Full Nicholas L. Dukes, a successful attorney, called off his engagement to Lizzie Nutt; he feared that her reputation was not unsullied. Soon thereafter Captain Adam Nutt, Lizzie's father, confronted Dukes in a misguided defense of his daughter's honor. During a scuffle Dukes shot and killed Captain Nutt. Dukes, pleading self-defense, was acquitted; the jury allegedly contained many of his friends. A few months later James Nutt, Captain Nutt's son, shot Dukes dead. James Nutt was acquitted by reason of insanity.

McDade notes that, "There are various editions of this work, all with the same title page but with different cover titles." This one, which McDade calls the second edition, has a wrapper title, "The Uniontown Tragedy. The Slayer Slain." Its copyright date is 1883, the year of the murder; McDade's copy was copyrighted 1884.

This is a classically sensational Barclay crime pamphlet. Other Barclay printings end with a plate after page 64. Ours prints, from pages 65-79, "One who never forgot that he was his Father's Son and his Sister's Brother! The Trial and Acquittal of Young James Nutt." McDade says this is the third printing.

“A Man Inconsistent With Himself”

A rare survival from the 1799 contest for Governor of Pennsylvania. Thomas McKean, the Jeffersonian candidate, was Chief Justice of Pennsylvania's Supreme Court and a Signer of the Declaration of Independence; James Ross was the Federalist contender.

McKean "adheres to nothing but what accords with his own interests, nor longer than those interests are subserved by his consistency." Originally a Federalist, McKean had switched parties in 1796. He "has been for above thirty years, a man inconsistent with himself, varying from opinions openly avowed, to the contrary, in repeated instances." From 1765, when McKean shifted positions on the Stamp Act until he perceived that his interests demanded he oppose it, until the present day, McKean has been an unprincipled, self-interested scoundrel.

Nevertheless, McKean won the election.

This is the first American edition, reprinted from the 1770 London, of the life and thought of Archbishop Secker, defender of the Episcopal faith in America. Secker was the adversary of Jonathan Mayhew and Charles Chauncy, who resisted his attempts to 'Episcopize' America.

This eulogy scolds them for their "unreasonable and groundless Jealousies of the Church of England." The Confederacy’s Theoretician of Privateering

YEARS GIVEN MUCH ATTENTION TO SYSTEMATIZING AND ENCOURAGING WHAT MAY BE TERMED PRIVATE WARFARE - NOT ONLY ON THE OCEAN BUT ON OUR COASTS, SOUNDS, BAYS AND RIVERS - DEEMS IT HIS DUTY AND PRIVILEGE TO PRESENT THE FOLLOWING CONSIDERATIONS. . . [np: 1863]. 7, [1 blank] pp. At head of title: "[Not to be published.]"] Folded, uniformly toned. "Mississippi" is in bold ink manuscript; the rest is printed. Very Good.

To the Governor and the Legislature of the State of

The undersigned having for the last two years given much attention to systematizing and encouraging what may be termed private warfare—not only on the ocean but on our coasts, sounds, bays and rivers—deems it his duty and privilege to present the following considerations:

I. The Volunteer Navy.

Congress has passed an act entitled: "An act to establish a Volunteer Navy," which authorizes the President to incorporate into the service of the Confederate States any private armed vessel over 100 tons, which may be armed in a war vessel, and commissions her officers—all to be presented by the laws, rules and regulations of the regular Confederate navy. These vessels devote themselves to privateering on the enemy's commerce—their reward, as provided in the act, being what they capture, except 10 per cent reserved for the manning, and the (future) claims of the state, besides the bounty given in the act.

The object was to extend the Volunteer Navy, to be placed upon privateering by the Paris Convention of 1856, and the gradually growing predilection against it, resulting from former experience of the war; as well as to perform and devote an armament of great service to our own commerce and to efficient aid in the present exigencies of the Union. It was to be a Volunteer Navy, in subordination to nation in peace, or to the Florida Convention.

The revenue and profits that shall arise from enterprises, can be judged by the amount of the force. In the Revolution, the Liberty Boys' Association, composed of captured British and enemy vessels, and in the war with the Spanish Armada, the supply of man-power and naval equipment, and the Florida Convention.

In both cases, the efficacy was probably of great benefit to us; it largely contributed to our final success. Many individual acts of great success and economic profit of privateering, though given First, were not it necessary, when Apparently Sage sent his pamphlet, advocating the use of "private armed vessels," to the several Confederate States. The Journal of Virginia's House of Delegates for 15 September 1863 records the receipt of this document, and its referral to the committee on military affairs. We can thus infer that Parrish & Willingham's suggested 1864 printing date is incorrect.

Sage was "a New Orleans lawyer who enthusiastically promoted to President Davis and others in the Confederate's high command the benefits of privateering and sabotage, both in America and abroad" [H-Net online review of Tidwell: April '65: Confederate Covert Action in the American Civil War.] Sage proposed establishing a volunteer navy charged with seizing Union vessels, for use by the Confederacy, and a system of bounties for the successful captors.

"In 1863 a volunteer navy - - a modified version of privateering - - was authorized by the Confederate Congress. The man behind this idea was Bernard Janin Sage, who came from Connecticut, but had later settled in New Orleans, where he studied law and also became the owner of a sugar plantation." During the War he sought "investors in Richmond to form the

Two Experienced Northern Politicians

Colfax and Seward, both leaders of the Whig Party, became prominent Republicans as the Sectional Crisis heated up. Seward had terrible penmanship; we have valiantly sought to decipher his letter:

"My Dear Sir: I don't know whether I replied to your suggestion about increase of pay for Mail Agents or not. I will think as favorably of it as I can. It would be right in some cases and wrong in others. And I suppose it difficult to discriminate.

"If the press of the enemy will not reconcile our Southern friends to waive their interruptions, then no answer that the candidate could give them would satisfy them short of one that would scatter all the friends he has in the North. Let us try for once to see how well we can do by standing on equal grounds."

Did the British Navy Cooperate in the Sale of “American Negroes, Who Had Sought the Protection of the British Flag”?

The document prints Admiralty Department correspondence concerning "a report of American Negroes, who had sought the protection of the British flag, having been afterwards sold in the West Indies as Slaves." Such a charge, it is noted, is extremely serious; Vice Admiral Cochrane says it's a phony claim "trumped up among the people on the coast to prevent their Negroes deserting." Affidavits and evidence are presented.

Yorkshiremen: Don’t Vote for a “Slave Dealer”!

108. [Slave Trader]: YORKSHIREMEN, BE NOT THE DUPES OF A FACTION, WHO THINK TO INFLUENCE YOUR PASSIONS BY THE CRY OF "NO POPERY," IT IS RAISED FOR THE PURPOSE OF INFLUENCING YOUR VOTES, OF INTRODUCING A SLAVE DEALER INTO THE SENATE, FOR THE PURPOSE OF SCREENING PECULATORS, AND PUBLIC ROBBERS. THOSE WHO HAVE RAISED THE CRY, LAUGH AT THE CREDULITY OF THOSE WHO BELIEVE IT; JUDGE OF THEIR SINCERITY BY THIS DECISIVE FACT, MR. Leeds: Printed at the Leeds Mercury-Office, by Edward Baines, [1796 to early 1800s]. Folio broadside, 10" x 16." Laid down on heavy card stock. Toned, several shallow blank margin chips, a tear through the "s" in "Votes." Printed in a variety of type sizes and styles. Good+.

The printer, Edward Baines [1774-1848] was the proprietor of the Leeds Mercury. Wikipedia says it "became the leading provincial paper in England." This clever broadside manages to merge antislavery and anti-Catholic sentiment in an attack on Mr. Lascelles.

The African Slave Trade made the Lascelles family fortune. "Henry Lascelles [from 1690 to 1753] was a banker and sugar importer who held shares in 21 ships involved in the slave trade between Barbados and Africa. He bought land in Yorkshire with the fortune he amassed" [article on Yorkshire and the slave trade, at online site of historic England]. Not located on OCLC as of November 2023.

The Unwelcome Influence of Anglican Bishops in the American Colonies

111. Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts: A BOUND VOLUME OF EIGHT SERMONS, EACH A SEPARATE IMPRINT, PREACHED BEFORE THE INCORPORATED SOCIETY FOR THE PROPAGATION OF THE GOSPEL IN FOREIGN PARTS, AT ITS ANNIVERSARY MEETINGS IN 1755, 1758, 1759, 1761, 1762, 1765, 1766, 1767. London: 1755-1767. Bound in attractive contemporary or early 19th century half morocco, marbled boards, marbled endpapers, and raised spine bands. 'Sermons' stamped in gilt on spine. Bookplate of Paul Beilby Thompson [1784-1852], the first Baron Wenlock, an English Whig and Member of Parliament during the late 1820's and the 1830's. Pages 80; 77, [1]; 99, [1]; 88; 91; 119, [1]; 68, [1]; 98, [1] pp [each, as issued]. A lovely set, in Near Fine condition [tear to one blank margin on the 1767 Sermon, and spotting on a couple of its leaves].

The Preachers, listed chronologically, are Thomas Hayter [1755], James Johnson [1758], Anthony Ellis [1759], Richard Newcome [1761], John Hume [1762], Philip Yonge [1765], William Warburton [1766], John Ewer [1767]. In addition to their Sermons, the pamphlets print the Society's Charter, its Proceedings over the preceding year, names of members and donors; the names of the Society's missionaries in Canada, the American Colonies, and the West Indies, with their narrative reports on their work, including conversions of Indians, Slaves, Negroes; and a list of the Bishops and Deans who have preached before the Society beginning in 1701. The form of a bequest to the Society is usually printed at the end.

The Society's efforts in the American colonies aroused great resentment among some leading American clergy, particularly Charles Chauncy and Jonathan Mayhew, who viewed its activities as attempts to establish the Church of England in the New World and to destroy the democratic organization of American churches. Their resistance during the 1760's paralleled political developments which would produce the American Revolution.

Certainly the Sermons reflect the high-water mark of British self-assurance. Bishop Hume describes "the real state of the multitudes--a set of thoughtless, illiterate, untutoured, creatures." Warburton's 1766 Sermon, "a statement of British manifest destiny..." [Gephart], dismisses objections of non-Episcopalians to the Society's mission: Americans suffer from the "outrageous folly" of "Freethinking." They are "a People, where wealth and Civil Faction, have, as usual, inflamed religious zeal." And the Society of Jesus has "immerged themselves in the worst part of civil intrigues."

At the same time, he and his colleagues unequivocally denounce "the infamous traffic for Slaves," which "directly infringes both divine and human Law." They are "endowed with all our Faculties, possessing all our qualities but that of colour; our BRETHREN both by Nature and Grace."

The scary Denmark Vesey rebellion occurred during Bennett's single term as Governor, 1820-1822. Bennett expressed concern about possible injustices in the State's investigation, to the annoyance of his constituents, and opposed the domestic slave trade. Three of his slaves were hanged along with Vesey. He was known as a Union man during his service as State Senator, 1837-1840.

Freedmen's Bureau Concludes That the Black Ferryman Does Not Own the Strawberry Ferry

114. [Strawberry Ferry]: AUTOGRAPH DOCUMENTS, SIGNED, ORDERING RETURN OF A "FERRY KNOWN AS STRAWBERRY FERRY" TO THE WARING FAMILY OF SOUTH CAROLINA, AND DIVESTING "POSSESSION OF THE FORMER
"In 1866 Scott was appointed assistant commissioner of the Freedmen's Bureau in South Carolina. He struggled diligently to provide food for freedmen and destitute whites but was dismayed by the opposition and cruelty of many whites toward the former slaves. Scott reluctantly accepted the Republican Party's nomination for governor in 1868 and was elected with support derived largely from newly enfranchised black male voters" [South Carolina Encyclopedia online].

Harleston, writing "in behalf of his sister Mrs. John B. Waring, begs respectfully to state that the Ferry known as Strawberry Ferry was established in 1705 and has never been out of possession of her late husband's family, that there is a flat ferry now in the possession of the former Ferryman, a colored man and that he claims the same under an order from Capt. Wall C.T. and refuses to give up the same. He has been using the Ferry for six or eight months and has applied the income of the same to his personal use. I now ask that the Flat be returned to the proper owner, Mrs. Waring ..."

On the verso is the official decision by Order of Brigadier General R.K. Scott: "Hd Qtrs Asst. Commissioner, Respectfully returned to J.W. Harleston. The Flat within referred to is hereby turned over to its owner Mrs. Waring who will also take and hold for her own use ... By order of Brig. Gen'l R.K. Scott."

Sumner’s Senatorial Career Begins

115. Sumner, Charles: FOR SENATOR IN CONGRESS, FOR SIX YEARS, FROM THE FOURTH OF MARCH, 1851, CHARLES SUMNER, OF BOSTON. [Boston: 1851]. Oblong printed political ticket, 2-7/8" x 5-7/8." Old vertical folds, Very Good. Sumner's name in bold type.

Sumner's political affiliations were guided by his antislavery sentiments. He began his political career as a Whig. But he became a founding member of the Free Soil Party, and in that capacity was elected to the United States Senate in 1851. In 1854 he was an early convert to the new Republican Party, and remained as such until the end of his Senatorial career in 1871.

This rare artifact is from Sumner's campaign for his first term in the U.S. Senate. $275.00
“Mesmeric Power and Suggestion”

Sunderland was a minister, antislavery activist, and what Wikipedia calls a "mental philosopher." He was affiliated with the Methodist Church and its abolitionist organizations. "In 1842 he founded and also edited the Magnet in which he expounded his beliefs in mesmeric power and suggestion. He made a special study of animal magnetism and mesmerism" [Encyclopedia.com]. He obviously had a restless mind, and ended up an atheist when he died in 1885.

His pamphlet exposes the "vast amount of misconception and prejudice in the community generally, against the subject." No one "with a thimble full of brains" should be fooled by the "Confessions," which with "falsehood" and "deception" seek to obscure the "useful purposes" of Mesmerism.

“We Might as Well Prepare for a Terrible Civil War”

Find-a-Grave describes the author as follows: "Algernon Tebbs was a successful lawyer in Leesburg, Virginia and Platte City, Missouri. He lived in Leesburg, Virginia and on the nearby Sugarland Run farm until 1854 when he moved with his family to Platte County, Missouri. During the turbulent years of the Civil War he went with his son Clement to Texas while his wife Julia returned to Virginia. After the war ended Algernon returned to Platte County, Missouri where he engaged in various business interests."

Tebbs begins his letter with a discussion of problems concerning a sale of his land, and the assistance to be rendered by Harrison. The rest of the letter, comprising two-thirds of page two and the remainder of page three [four lines], expresses Tebbs's insightful and intelligent musings on the condition of the nation:

"The country is in a bad state. Missouri will not secede. The Southern States will not return during Lincoln's admin., nor afterwards until a new party, not sectional, gets into power and the Constitution is so amended as to give the South equality in the territories, now remaining, & hereafter to be acquired by absolute provision: and if the policy is pursued of holding the Forts & enforcing the collection of Revenue in the seceded states, then, they are gone forever & civil war will most likely follow. There is but one way of bringing back the seceded States: & that is to let them alone & suspend the operation of the Federal laws in those states, until the constitution can be acceptably amended. The people of the North will sustain a fair compromise amendment, if the vile politicians will ever suffer the question to come before them. The unfortunate notion of holding the Forts and collecting revenue, is fatal. It must be abandoned. The Seceding States will never submit to it. If this policy should be persevered in, which seems to be the common notion between right & wrong in the premises, then all hope is gone and we might as well prepare for a terrible civil war.

Yours very truly, A. Sidney Tebb.

"Most Meritorious of the Campaign Lives of 1860"

"This, in subject matter the most meritorious of the campaign lives of 1860, was drawn partly from the Chicago Press and Tribune article, but principally from the author's own intimate knowledge of Lincoln's career" [Wessen]. Washburne was "a warm friend of Lincoln, and a shrewd politician and seasoned political orator," whose speech is "biographical in character, and sold as a campaign document" [Id.]

"The Illinois Congressman-- who had known Lincoln since 1840-- delivered this biographical address only two weeks after the convention" [Eberstadt]. Washburne says, "I have known him in private life, I have known him at the bar, and have been associated with him in every political contest in our State since the advent of 'Tippecanoe and Tyler too,' in 1840." This item also prints the Republican platform, adopted May 17, 1860.

Born to a Jewish family in Poland in 1833, Rosenthal at the age of twelve "was sent to Paris to study art and escape conscription in the Imperial Russian Army, which recognized the Jewish rule of regarding a boy as of age at thirteen." Immigrating to Philadelphia at the age of 17, he became a successful lithographer and mezzotint engraver, winning a "conspicuous place among American engravers" [DAB]. Library Company online article on Rosenthal, in "Philadelphia on Stone." $500.00

"The artist ridicules the government's early efforts to overhaul and augment a somewhat outdated Union fleet in order to blockade Southern ports and effectively defend against Confederate privateers and blockade runners. Navy Secretary Gideon Welles of Connecticut is disparaged as two Union vessels—essentially wooden washtubs armed with small cannons—try to block the path of a sleek Confederate steamer, the Nashville.

The dialogue and cartooned characters express the satiric and humorous critiques common to the Currier broadsides of this period.

Webster's Rare Broadside Declaration of Whig Principles

This rare broadside printing of the Declaration of Whig Principles, promulgated for the 1840 election, is the paradigmatic expression of Whig political culture. "To understand the Whigs, one must understand how they used language to exhort, persuade, and conciliate; one must also understand how their responses to the problems they faced were affected by their distinctive culture... One occasion will serve to illustrate all of these points. On September 10, 1840, fifty thousand Whigs [they claimed] rallied on Bunker Hill" [Howe]. Daniel Webster is the Declaration's author. [Fletcher Webster, 2 'The Writings and Speeches of Daniel Webster: Private Correspondence', page 597 (Boston: 1903); and 2 The Works of Daniel Webster, pp 41 et seq. (Boston: 1851)].

1840 began the Whigs' prime decade of political influence. A national party, it was, in the Declaration's words, "capable of protecting all parts of the country, securing all interests." But its advocacy of "freedom of speech and of the press" was not mere pablum: Democrats had sought to suppress delivery of anti-slavery mailings into the South. The Democratic Administration of Andrew Jackson is marked by "the insinuations and influences of evil counsellors, or perhaps against his own passions, when moved and excited... Acting under his characteristic love of rule, and uneasiness under opposition," he chose to "enter upon measures which plunged both him and the country into greater and greater difficulties... the final explosion [The Panic of 1837] taking place a few months after his retirement from office." Jackson "trampled down and destroyed... a sound and uniform currency." His successor, Martin Van Buren, concurred in each Jacksonian policy-- truly a "catastrophe." The solution is a return to sound fiscal principles, disinterested patriotism, abandonment of the spoils system, and the election to the presidency of William Henry Harrison.

Rede restitum ecallum tuum. Come, give a reckoning of thy Bayewick.

CHRIST the Author and Doctor of all Truth, in his Gospel, lieth in the heart of His House, to all householder, laying on this woe: Like as the king of bees to an householder's son, that was first fed in the morning in his want, and sent into his Vineyard, so did the Abba, the first, the ninth, and the eighteenth. And as he found them standing idle, he said to them: Why stand ye here uncrowned? Go ye into my Vineyard, and that it thou shall give you. And while the day was staid, he called his Servants, and bade they should give every man a penny.

Spiritu, this householder is our master and Lord Christ, the true householder and head of his Church here in this world, which calleth men into labour, and both in his Vineyard, and that is in daily days of the year. As in the time of suns, he called by his servants, to bring in countless fruits to the earth, and to crown ye and their children. And as they went into the field, they found no man, and as they went in, they found his Vineyard, and that is in daily days of the year, and that is in daily days of the year. And as they went into the field, they found no man, and as they went in, they found his Vineyard, and that is in daily days of the year, and that is in daily days of the year.

WINTERBOTHAM. IN FOUR VOLUMES. WITH NUMEROUS ENGRAVINGS. London: Printed for the Editor; J. Ridgway, York-Street: H.D. Symonds, Paternoster Row: and D. Holt, Newark, [1795]. Four volumes, with seventeen engraved, uncolored plates [including frontis engraving in each volume], and four folding letterpress tables. Collation: pages [2- frontis: Falls of St. Anthony], viii, [26- 13 engravings plus their blank versos], 591, [1 blank]; [2- frontis: Tobacco plant], [4], 492, [1 blank]; [2- frontis: Black Snake], [4], 525, [1 blank], folding table after page 280; [2- frontis: Plan of Franklinville], [4], 415, [1 blank], 95, [1 blank], [9], [1blank], three folding tables after page 294. Bound in later half calf and marbled paper over boards [hinges tender, front cover of Volume 2 detached but present]. Text, plates, and tables clean. A couple of the plates trimmed closely, with occasional effect on caption. Except as noted, Very Good.

The several plates noting dates are all 1794. Except for the frontis in each volume, all plates are bound consecutively in the first volume. As the Reese copy notes, this is evidently an early state of the first edition: the title pages are undated, the engravings are uncolored, and the book was evidently bound before later plates, maps, plans, and directions to the binder became available.

A detailed index at the end of Volume 4 suggests the breadth of Winterbotham's coverage of his subject: the early settlement of the Americas, the American Revolution, the States of the United States, the Canadian Provinces and Northwest Territory, the West Indies and South America. Winterbotham found the time to write his tome while serving a stint at Newgate Prison for sedition.
The volumes were owned by William Chauncey Fowler [1793-1881], with his ownership stamp on the blank upper margin of each volume's title page ["W.C. Fowler"]. Wikipedia has written his biography, calling him "an American scholar." Yale University has his papers, as well as those of the related Chauncey family.

“A Fantastical Vision”

"This strongly anti-Confederate satire is a fantastical vision of the Union defeat of the secessionist movement. A hideous monster representing secession emerges from the water at left. He is hit by a charge from a mammoth cannon 'Death to Traitors!' operated by Uncle Sam (right). A two-faced figure representing Baltimore, whose allegiance to the Union was at least questionable during the war, pulls at Uncle Sam's coattails. The explosion sends several small demons, representing the secessionist states, hurling through the air. Prominent among them is South Carolina, in a coffin at upper right.

"Tennessee and Kentucky, two Southern states internally divided over the secession question, are represented by two-headed creatures. Virginia, though part of the Confederacy, is also shown divided--probably an acknowledgment of the Appalachian and eastern regions' alignment with the Union.
"Among the demons is a small figure of Tennessee senator and 1860 presidential candidate John Bell, with a bell-shaped body.

"In the foreground is a large American flag on which Winfield Scott, commander of the Union forces, and a bald eagle rest.

"Despite the imprinted copyright date, the print, according to the inscription on the Library's impression, seems to have been registered for copyright on June 14 but not deposited until July 10, 1861" [Reilly].

"The Only Minister to Sign the Declaration of Independence"

"John Witherspoon, a native of Scotland, graduated from the University of Edinburgh, was ordained a minister, and came to America in 1768 to be the sixth president of the College of New Jersey. He was a member of the Provincial Congress and subsequently the Continental Congress, serving from 1776 to 1782. He was the only minister to sign the Declaration of Independence" [Felcone 292].
This is the second of two editions printed by Shepard Kollok in 1789, with alterations to the text and minor additions. Children, Witherspoon says, "may, even in infancy, be the subjects of regenerating grace, and thereby become really holy... [and] are much more early capable of receiving benefit then is generally supposed."

Greeley: “The Enemy of Our Sex”

A rare campaign broadside evidencing women's involvement in the 1872 presidential election. The Campaign supports Grant, and dedicates itself "to the unanimous endeavor to defeat Horace Greeley, the enemy of our sex and the betrayer of our party." Mrs. H.M. Barnard, who ran the Woman's Campaign, was "Chairman of the Ladies' Central Exec. Com., 1104 L street, Washington, D.C." This issue prints nearly a full column of Susan B. Anthony’s denunciation of Greeley for speaking "tenderly of Southern men disfranchised by their own State Constitutions... And yet this same Horace Greeley has no care or sympathy for 7,000,000 women disfranchised by their state constitutions, who have property wasted by men with no redress."
Greeley has allied himself with the "loathsome," bloody traitors of the Confederacy, "unrepentant rebels - whose palms, like that of Lady Macbeth, can never lose the stain till it is washed away by a flood of returning loyalty in the soul." The broadside prints a Greeley campaign ticket, advocating "STATE SOVEREIGNTY! WHITE SUPREMACY! AND REPUDIATION!"

From the Inspector General of the Army

130. Wool, John E.: AUTOPHAGH LETTER, SIGNED, FROM WASHINGTON, 15 FEBRUARY 1827, TO HUGH PEEBLES, CONCERNING WOOL'S MORTGAGE ON REAL ESTATE WHICH PEEBLES WISHES TO SELL. Single leaf, 7-7/8" x 9-5/8," Old folds, entirely in Wool's hand in neat ink manuscript. Signed at the end, with a flourish, 'John E. Wool.' Very Good.

Wool writes that he "has recently been informed that you are about, or have already agreed, to sell your house and lot, on which I presume I have a mortgage, to E. Wilson Esqr. Apprehensive that you may have been induced to the agreement, under the expectation that I should indulge Mr. Wilson in the payment of the mortgage, I conceive it my duty to inform you, that, when Mr. Wilson suggested to me the idea of purchasing the property in anticipation of such indulgence, I expressly stated to him it could not be granted and that I could not consent to any arrangement other than that which existed between you and myself." Wool acknowledges that "the subject is a delicate one, and relates to a family nearly connected with Mrs. Wool." After his signature, Wool appends a postscript, stating that he "should be pleased to receive a line from you on the subject of this letter."

When he wrote this Letter Wool, a career Army man, was Inspector-General of the Army. During his long career-- which included service in the War of 1812, the Mexican War, and the Civil War-- he earned a well-deserved reputation as an extraordinarily capable soldier and organizer. The oldest general on either side of the Civil War, the 77-year-old Wool commanded the Department of the East. $275.00
